"We can never give another person what we have found, but we can cause them to have a desire for it." -Oswald Chambers

Beyond highlighting a few of our 2008 summer staff members, these four photos visually express love and communicate important practices of the Christian faith: community, service, and worship.

Offsetting our tendencies to compartmentalize our lives, ministry is more than a summer in a national park, and it is more than what happens during scheduled church functions. I once heard it put this way: "Ministry is an outward manifestation of our relationship to God." These photos, depicting community, service, and worship, remind us of what that relationship looks like. We are also reminded that ministry is an everyday calling that can be answered in a variety of ways in national parks, in our home communities, and in our workplaces.

Would we all commit anew to submitting our hearts, souls, and minds to God's purposes during this holiday season. Perhaps we can cause others to desire the hope that our lives represent!

Happy Holidays,
